The current state of the economy is overwhelming for any construction executive. Lending is at a standstill with few projects on the horizon and too many hungry bidders. The result of such an environment requires all businesses to reevaluate their current market focus, key people and operating and measurement processes to stay ahead of the competition. Come listen to Feeley & Driscoll as they review the current state of the economy, discussing historical trends and the economic forecast for 2010; key metrics that you and your organization should be focusing on from a customer, people and financial perspective; and strategies to survive and come out stronger as a result of this downturn.

Mr. Callahan has over 30 years in public accounting with extensive experience in accounting/tax and business planning issues as they apply to contractors and suppliers. He has authored and lectured on business succession and strategic planning issues and on corporate and real estate tax planning matters, including passive losses and alternative minimum tax issues. Mr. Callahan is Director of the Construction Services Group at Feeley & Driscoll, P.C.
